Volunteers Pull XX Pounds/Bags of Trash out of XX Stream

Izaak Walton League XX Chapter Brings Community Together To Stop Water Pollution

CITY, STATE — Trash in streams is more than just an eyesore – it can pollute our water supplies, damage fish and wildlife habitat, and spoil outdoor recreation. The XX Chapter of the Izaak Walton League is combatting water pollution with a clean-up of XX Stream and bringing our community together for clean water.

To help keep our community clean and safe, XX [number] members of the League’s XX Chapter and other volunteers spent xx hours removing trash from XX Stream. Insert details from event, such as:

- How many bags/pounds/dumpsters of trash were collected
- Some of the most interesting items removed from stream
- Approximate area of stream/stream bank cleaned up (e.g., one mile)
- Partner organizations involved
- Next steps, such as a clean-up on another segment of the stream
- Whether the clean-up is a regular event (quarterly, annual)
- Other steps the chapter may take, such as meeting with local government officials to discuss boosting recycling efforts or educating residents about the negative impacts trash in streams.

How can trash cause so much trouble for our community? As plastic breaks down, Bisphenol A (BPA) and other chemicals can leach into streams and rivers, which is where most Americans get their drinking water. Plastics and other litter can collect toxic chemicals and bacteria pollutants and distribute them throughout the waterway. Large trash items can cause stream erosion that further degrades water quality and can even contaminate the streambed.

Trash also has physical impacts on our community. Glass and metal can cut anglers, kids, and dogs playing in the stream. Trash in the water can lead to fish kills due to decreased oxygen levels. As trash begins to break up, fish and other animals can mistake it for food, causing intestinal blockages, toxicity, and eventually death.

Every person in our community deserves clean water. Visit the XX Chapter website at [URL here] for more information.
